Daria is a native of Baton Rouge. She has owned Renaissance Gallery along with her husband, David, since year 2000. She grew up in a photography family and married a photographer as well. Her father is the late Jack Lockett of Lockett's Photography. After Jack's retirement, Daria, along with her sister, owned and managed the family business until 2003. At that time, they opened a location for Renaissance on Highland Road near The Country Club of Louisiana in a nature setting called Highland Road Village.

Daria's background is that of an artist, with a bachelor's degree in Graphic Design from LSU. Her education includes fine art, graphic design, photography, and a great variety of photographic art studies from the age of 10 and still continuing today.

Her main focus as a photographer is from an art point of view. The camera is a tool along with digital software, paint and other art media, all used to create the final piece of art. She has many thousands of hours of photographic art experience and education as the computer is used even more often than the camera. According to Daria, each new session is an opportunity and a challenge to create something beautiful that will bring joy to the owner of the image for the rest of their lives.

Daria and David have photographed the current governor, Bobby Jindal, many Louisiana musicians for The Louisiana Music Hall of Fame and The Baton Rouge Symphony. You can see their images on websites for many local businesses such as Highland Porch and Ambrosia Bakery and their portraits have graced the covers of several local magazines.

Daria's favorite thing about her life is her family; being married to David for 27 years and being the mother of two fine young women, one also an artist and entrepreneur, the other a successful business manager.
