A Pragmatic Discussion of Copyright Law, and the Potential Pitfalls Faced by Photographers who use Social Media.

Bio: At the conclusion of my commission in the U.S. Air Force I, moved to Baton Rouge to begin law school at LSU. After the Bar Exam in 2007, I sold some baseball cards and bought a DSLR to fill my spare time. Since then, I continue to immerse myself in the study of photography and related intellectual property issues.

During the day I work as a Project Manager for the Louisiana Workforce Commission, and my remaining time is spent with my wife and dogs, or traveling the country to photograph collegiate sporting events. My photography has been featured in a wide array of publications that range from the cover of Sports Illustrated and Baseball America, to textbooks and trading cards.
